The International University in Germany has two schools, the School of Information Technology and the School of Business Administration, and a Department of Sciences and the Liberal Arts. The main focus of all programs is information technology and its successful management in a globalized market. All programs, therefore, comprise three components in different variations and accentuation: information technology, management, cultural studies and languages. One of the defining features of the International University in Germany consists in the close relations it enjoys with industry and commerce. There is a growing number of partnerships that the International University enjoys with universities abroad. The largest number of exchange programs are with universities in the United States, and particularly with Business Schools and Departments of Computer Science there.
